Apparel: Consumer Price Index by Month

The Apparel Consumer Price Index saw sharp increases through January and February of 2022 but slowed in March.

Global conflicts, supply chain issues, and rising inflation are contributing factors to the observed price increases.

Apparel: Consumer Spending by Month

Consumer spending dropped significantly in January and February but leveled in March.

When looking at age demographics, spending by both Gen X and Z consumers rose in March.

Apparel Sector has experienced significant headwinds

IOS 14.5 Update

Apple's IOS 14.5 update, released on April 26, 2021, allowed consumers to opt out of purchase tracking, creating significant challenges for digital marketing in the sector.

Stimulus Checks

Following the final round of COVID stimulus checks in March 2021, consumer discretionary spending declined, particularly in the direct-toconsumer space.

Supply Chain Challenges

Recent COVID shut-downs in China and the Russia-Ukraine conflict have created additional obstacles to an already compromised post-pandemic supply chain.

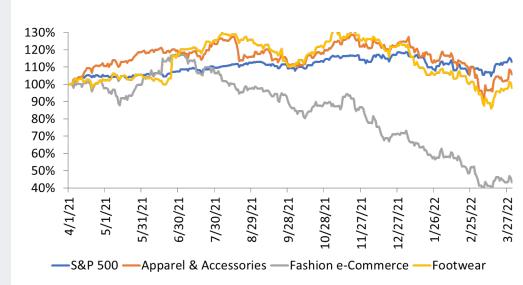

Rising Prices

Rising gasoline and utility prices require an increasing percentage of total household spending and have contributed to a decrease in consumer discretionary spending.

Enterprise Value: % Change by Date

Fashion e-Commerce businesses have experienced significant declines in EV since mid 2021, when compared to the S&P 500 and other Apparel sub-sectors.

Fashion e-Commerce was particularly impacted by the IOS 14.5 update, and the discontinuation of stimulus checks.

Fashion e-Commerce businesses have experienced the largest deterioration in valuation multiples

EV/Revenue: % Change by Date

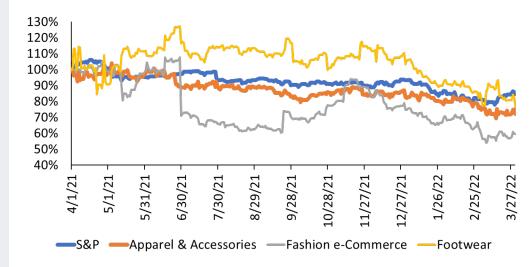

Fashion e-Commerce experienced the steepest declines in EV/Revenue multiples though all Apparel subsectors have dropped below the S&P since late 2021.

Sector headwinds will likely result in continued weaker valuations in the near-term

EV/EBITDA: % Change by Date

Footwear EV/EBITDA multiples outpaced the S&P until late in the quarter. Margin pressures from mounting supply chain issues and rising input costs are likely contributing to the downward trend.
